	the winner will be awarded a bag of silver.”			M S V	M S V
	“That prize shall be mine,” boasted the shoemaker,			M S V	M S V as he stitched a dainty pair of shoes. “I will tell the			M S V	M S V king that my boots can dance all by themselves.”			M S V	M S V
	“Dancing boots?” scoffed a farmer, who was			M S V	M S V
taking a cartload of cabbages to market. “Why, I			M S V	M S V
